The Hero Thrill Show took place Saturday, at the sports complex in South Philadelphia and the weather could not be nicer. After a few short speeches it was time to have fun. Firefighters showed of rope tactics and some stunts. Recruitment members kept trying to get people interested in joining. City residency is not required. There is no physical assessment test to join, however the recruitment team did not have the info needed on the standards needed to graduate.

The Highway Patrol Motorcycle Drill Team was on hand and did two shows. The K-9unit and Narcotics squad gave demonstrations as well. There were static displays of the different units, such as the helicopter and marine unit. The Bomb Squad had non functioning samples of explosives, to show people what the real thing looked like.

The money raised went to help pay for the education of children of fallen police and firefighters. This year, the organization is going to pay for the education for the children of Plymouth Twp. Officer Brad Fox. Brian Lorenzo, who was very much a part of the drill team was killed this year. His family now was in the VIP area watching the show and knowing that they would be helped in the exact way their husband and father helped many others in years past.
